

Nan Streeter, MS, obtained her BS degree from UCLA and MS degree from the University of Utah. She worked in clinical nursing settings in newborn intensive care for a number of years in San Francisco and Salt Lake City. Ms. Streeter started her public health career in 1989 when she started working with the Utah Department of Health. Currently, she is Director of the Maternal and Child Health Bureau. Ms. Streeter has served in many leadership positions throughout her career with the March of Dimes, Planned Parenthood, state professional organizations, and advocacy organizations.

Ms. Streeter is the current President of AMCHP and has been actively involved in AMCHP through committee work, serving as a member of the Board of Director and now as the President of the organization. As President, she is committed to promoting the health of mothers and children on a national level. Areas of focus include health across the lifespan for mothers and children, health care access, mental health, oral health, and early childhood development and adolescent health, among others.