For a quarter century, the Johns Hopkins Center for Injury Research and Policy has helped to redefine injury as a pressing public health problem and promote its research as a scientific discipline. Recognized around the world as a leader in injury research, education, policy and practice, the Center is guided by a commitment to ensure that its high-quality research is translated into programs and policies that make a difference.